

Week 2 — Finding Your Right Challenge

Choosing Effort, Pace, and Options That Fit

Challenge can feel different from one day to another. This week, notice the movement options, resistance, pace, and support that allow you to work while maintaining comfort and control.

This Week's Wellness Connection

An appropriate challenge requires effort, but it should still allow you to respond to your body. Sleep, nourishment, hydration, stress, recovery, and health changes may affect which level of challenge fits you today.

Building from My Exercise Starting Points

Use the information recorded on your Exercise Pages to explore:

- A movement option that fits
- An appropriate resistance
- A pace you can control
- The support you need
- When to pause or recover
- Whether you may be ready for a small increase

You do not have to change everything at once. One small adjustment may be enough.

This Week's Practice Focus

Notice what helps a movement or everyday activity feel challenging but manageable.

The right challenge meets me where I am and gives me room to build.

Your Week 2 Guide

What to Notice and Where to Record It

Use this guide with the facing My Week 2 Journey page. Each number points to the place where you will record what stands out.

1 — Return to My Real-Life Focus

Think about the everyday activity or experience you chose. Consider what a manageable challenge might feel like within that activity.

Record it in Section 1.

2 — Notice Across My Classes

Notice how movement options, resistance, pace, support, and recovery affect your experience.

Use your class cards, then record what stands out in Section 2.

3 — Consider My Wellness Connection

Think about what may have influenced how challenging an activity felt this week.

Record what stands out in Section 3.

4 — Connect It to Everyday Life

Notice where changing your pace, effort, option, or support helped you participate in everyday life.

Record the connection in Section 4.

5 — Pause and Reflect

Consider what you discovered about choosing a challenge that fits you.

Complete Section 5.
