

Week 6 — Expanding My Capacity

Exploring Where You May Be Ready to Build

Expanding your capacity does not always mean doing more. It may mean using greater control, participating more consistently, recovering more comfortably, trying a different option, or continuing an activity for a little longer.

This Week's Wellness Connection

Your readiness to increase may be influenced by sleep, nourishment, hydration, stress, health, recent activity, and recovery. Consider the whole story before deciding what fits you today.

Choosing a Small Next Step

You might explore:

- A small resistance change
- A slightly longer movement interval
- A different range of motion
- Less support when appropriate
- Greater control or steadiness
- Another class or everyday practice opportunity

One thoughtful change gives you clearer information than changing several things at once.

This Week's Practice Focus

Choose one place where you may be ready to explore a small increase or a different option.

I can expand my capacity one thoughtful step at a time.

My Week 6 Guide

What to Notice and Where to Record It

Use this guide with the facing My Week 2 Journey page. Each number points to the place where you will record what stands out.

1 — Return to My Real-Life Focus

Think about the everyday activity or experience you chose. Consider what a manageable challenge might feel like within that activity.

Record it in Section 1.

2 — Notice Across My Classes

Notice how movement options, resistance, pace, support, and recovery affect your experience.

Use your class cards, then record what stands out in Section 2.

3 — Consider My Wellness Connection

Think about what may have influenced how challenging an activity felt this week.

Record what stands out in Section 3.

4 — Connect It to Everyday Life

Notice where changing your pace, effort, option, or support helped you participate in everyday life.

Record the connection in Section 4.

5 — Pause and Reflect

Consider what you discovered about choosing a challenge that fits you.

Complete Section 5.
