

Week 9 — Recognizing What I Can Do

Looking Beyond Numbers and Comparisons

Progress may appear in what you count, but it may also appear in comfort, control, recovery, confidence, participation, or something becoming easier in everyday life.

This Week's Wellness Connection

Your progress includes the ways you have learned to respond to changing energy, wellness influences, and daily circumstances. Choosing an appropriate option, resting when needed, or returning after an interruption may also represent progress.

Recognizing Different Forms of Progress

Look for:

- Physical changes
- Functional or everyday changes
- Increased confidence
- Greater awareness
- More useful adjustments
- Increased participation
- Hidden Progress that may have been overlooked

This Week's Practice Focus

Notice one thing you can do, understand, or respond to differently than you did at the beginning.

When I look carefully, I can recognize more of what I have built.

My Week 9 Guide

What to Notice and Where to Record It

Use this guide with the facing My Week 2 Journey page. Each number points to the place where you will record what stands out.

1 — Return to My Real-Life Focus

Think about the everyday activity or experience you chose. Consider what a manageable challenge might feel like within that activity.

Record it in Section 1.

2 — Notice Across My Classes

Notice how movement options, resistance, pace, support, and recovery affect your experience.

Use your class cards, then record what stands out in Section 2.

3 — Consider My Wellness Connection

Think about what may have influenced how challenging an activity felt this week.

Record what stands out in Section 3.

4 — Connect It to Everyday Life

Notice where changing your pace, effort, option, or support helped you participate in everyday life.

Record the connection in Section 4.

5 — Pause and Reflect

Consider what you discovered about choosing a challenge that fits you.

Complete Section 5.
